Technical Analysis

Strategy: The bulls initially tried to gain control during the session but couldn't generate enough momentum, eventually succumbing to prevailing market uncertainty. Consequently, the KSE-100 index ended the day with a loss of 718.51 points, closing at 118,971.12.

The formation of a lower high and lower low, along with a negative close, suggests the potential for further downward movement. However, a rebound could be expected within the 118,150 – 117,330 range, where bullish activity may re-emerge. If the market fails to recover and falls below this critical zone, it could trigger a sharper decline towards the next support level between 116,800 and 116,200.

On the upside, the zone between 119,440 and 119,880 will act as immediate resistance. A break above this range could pave the way for a test of a more significant resistance area, located between 120,400 and 120,796. Traders are advised to maintain a stop-loss below 116,000 while targeting the 119,440 – 119,880 zone, and subsequently the 120,400 – 120,796 level.
