Technical Analysis

Strategy: The benchmark index extended its upside momentum and closed the session with a gain, reflecting improving market sentiment. The price action shows a steady formation of higher highs and higher lows, while the index has managed to sustain above short-term moving averages, indicating strengthening bullish momentum. The rebound from the lower Bollinger Band towards the mid-to-upper range further supports a constructive outlook.

In the near term, the index is likely to test the resistance zone of 168,500 – 169,700 (100-DMA), where some profit-taking may emerge due to prior supply pressure. A decisive break above this range can open further upside towards 172,500. On the downside, immediate support is now placed at 162,500–160,700, followed by stronger support around 155,500. As long as the index sustains above the 155,500 level, the prevailing bullish momentum is expected to stay intact, keeping the outlook tilted to the upside.
